PROMISES A SHAM

OTTAWA (CUP) — Secretary of State John Roberts says he is "very skeptical" that the Quebec government will deliver its promise to provide free education for that province's university students.

Roberts made the comment during an interview with representatives of the National Union of Students for its publication, the Student Advocate.

Roberts also told NUS that the federal government won't be pushing for free university education in Canada.

"If Quebec wants to provide free education for its university students it's within their jurisdiction to do so. I must say I'll believe it when I see it," Roberts said. "I'm very skeptical that they will deliver on such a promise. But I hesitate to prejudge them.

"My own feeling is that it is not the federal government who will be pushing for free university education across the country for two basic reasons. One is that it is difficult for us to see in the development of the economy where the resources are going to come to finance that.

"And secondly, since tax funds are scarce resources there is a question of the justice of using the funds of taxpayers to confer a benefit on people who will be better placed to repay that benefit and who will, under free education, be under no obligation to do so."

Quebec Education Minister Jacques-Yvan Morin told representatives of l'Association nationale des étudiants du Québec (ANEQ) at a January 25 meeting that student demands for free tuition at the province's seven universities would not be realized before the end of his present mandate.

However, Morin promised ANEQ that he would defend the proposal — estimated to cost $50 million a year — before the provincial cabinet. Free tuition is part of the Parti Quebecois' platform.

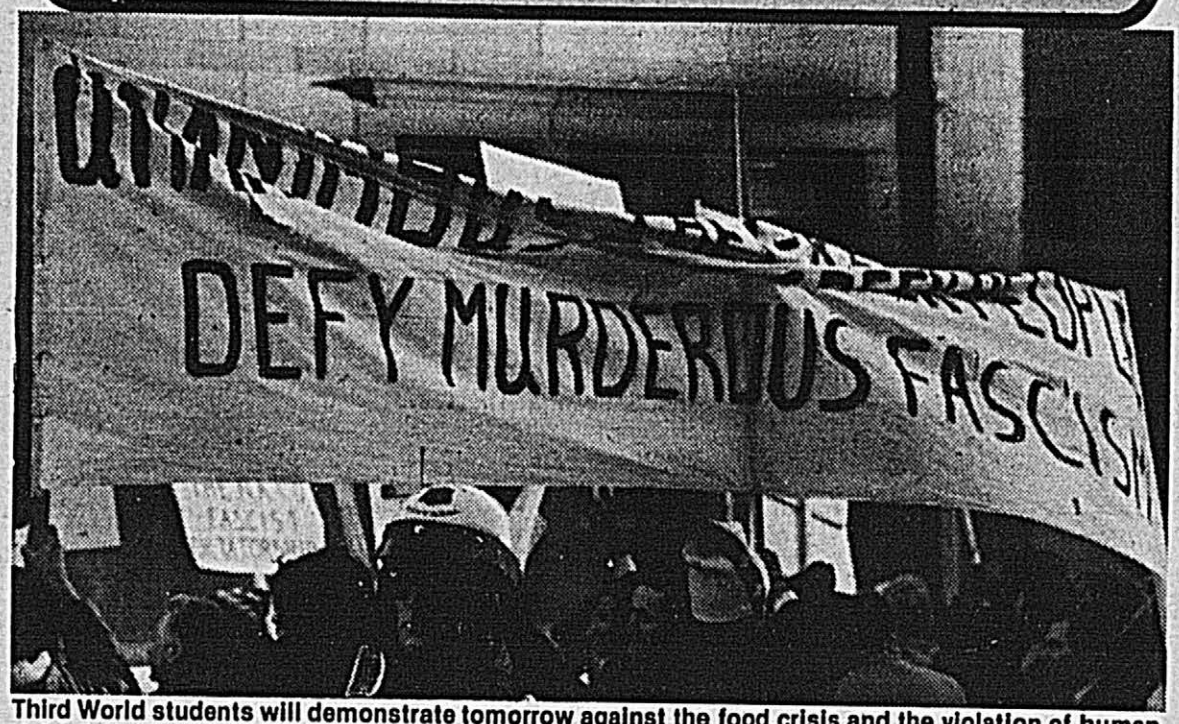
Although Roberts told NUS that the federal government doesn't know where the resources would come ot finance free education, he also claimed during the same interview that provinces are capable of providing free education.

"What we have in effect done is not so much providing funding for the provinces; what we are doing is providing them with access to tax resources and what they do with that access is their business.

"So what we really have been saying is the provinces no longer have an excuse for not providing the educational services which their citizens demand, no longer have an excuse framed in terms of 'we can't get the money to do it.' We will give you the room to do and you can no longer say to your citizens that it is financial restraint that holds you back," Roberts said.

Council Meeting

There will be a meeting of the Students' Council today at 6 in room 310 of the Union. Your elected representatives feel that an attendance of 50 students at last week's Open Meeting is scanty at best and apathetic at worst. Come and see them at work...



Third World students will demonstrate tomorrow against the food crisis and the violation of human rights in the Third World. The demonstration will take place at the symposium "Développement et Paix" held at Place-des-Arts on Tuesday starting at 9 am.

Student unemployment:

Summer looks bleak

OTTAWA (CUP) — The federal government's summer youth employment program has been unveiled and despite public outcry over last summer's crisis jobless levels, the only thing that's changed is the name.

The Canada Summer Youth Employment Program, announced February 1 by Employment Minister Bud Cullen, will create the same 60,000 direct jobs the government created last year, and cost for the program will increase only $1.2 million to 96.2 million.

Unemployment has risen 17 per cent over the period.

The program also boasts that it will place 250,000 students through Canada Manpower Centres for Students, an increase of 15,000 over 1977. But an employment ministry spokesperson was unable to account for the increase.

The spokesperson also admitted February 2 that at least 40,000 jobs had been counted twice in Cullen's announcement. Many of the government-created jobs will be placed through the manpower centres, and therefore are included in the 250,000 placement figure.

Half the government-created jobs are generated by the Young Canada Works program. The National Union of Students has demanded 80,000 more YCW jobs to prevent a recurrence of last summer's crisis, in which 165,000 students were without work.

NUS also demands that the principle of massive direct job creation be extended to general unemployment. But Cullen has insisted that the government must rely on the private sector to create employment.

"At least 200,000 students can expect a jobless summer — when they look for work there will be nothing from either the private sector or government," says NUS executive-secretary Dan O'Connor.

Cullen downplayed comparisons with last year in his announcement, preferring to dwell on his appeal to business. "Despite this major program, we are still relying on the private sector to provide the largest number of summer jobs for students."

Publications committee begins

by Catherine Duggan

The Ad Hoc Publications Committee, created by Council last semester to investigate Daily-Council relations, met for the first time last week.

The first session consisted largely of Daily representatives explaining the internal structure of the paper and how it functions. The Editor-in-Chief and Editorial Board are elected each semester by the staff, and Editorial Board decisions can be overturned by the staff.

The Daily representatives on the Board feel it essential that the Publications Board, if set up, be put into the main body of the Society's Constitution, and not created through a by-law. By-laws may be repealed by a two-thirds majority of the full Council, while constitutional change must go to a referendum of the students and then be ratified by Senate. "Setting the Publications Board up under a by-law would be ineffective because the ultimate control would still rest with Council," Daily rep Ellen McKeough said. Daily Editor-in-Chief Daniel Boyer stressed that "in order to make the Daily responsible to the students, it is essential that the Board be autonomous from Council."

Besides two Daily reps, the Committee is composed of two Students' Society reps, one student-at-large, McGill Reporter Editor Bob Morrison representing the University, and a person representing the professional press.

The Committee will also investigate the feasibility of a Publications Board to have jurisdiction over various campus media such as the Daily, Old McGill and perhaps Radio McGill. The Committee will discuss structural and editorial autonomy of the McGill student media, the possibility of a centralized advertising bureau for the groups, and ways to improve the dissemination of information on campus.

Bradley nets four as:

McGill ices Inuks 7-2

by Janet Doria

In a closer hockey game than the score indicated, the McGill Redmen beat the Chicoutimi Inuks on Saturday by a 7-2 margin. Mike Bradley scored four goals for McGill, while his linemates John Swan and Jeff Taylor picked up three points apiece.

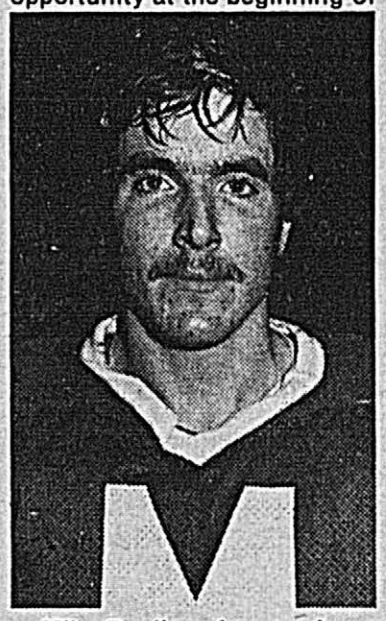
Al Smith played a superb game in nets for the Redmen, stopping 31 of 33 Inuk shots. Smith's performance was crucial because the Redmen defence is in a state of transition. Coach Herb Madill is experimenting with defensive pairs.

Smith explains

"I consciously play harder when we're playing against a team like Chicoutimi when I know we have to win," Smith explained. "It's easier to play against Three Rivers when we're not expected to win."

The Redmen dominated the first period, going into the locker room with a 3-0 lead. Chicoutimi came on strong in the second period, scoring two goals to McGill's one.

If Chicoutimi could have capitalized on a power play opportunity at the beginning of the final period, the Redmen might have had some difficulty keeping the game out of the Inuks' reach. However, the Redmen effectively killed the penalty, which Gerry O'Reilly had taken in the final moments of the second period.



Mike Bradley: four goals

Mike Bradley put the game away for the Redmen with a power play goal four minutes into the third period. Bradley described his goal: "I was trying to center it and it deflected off a defenceman into the net."

Madill satisfied

Madill was satisfied with the Redmen victory but not ecstatic about it. With reference to the game, he said, "I'm not excited about it but it was better than the last one. I'm pleased, though, because we played well in the third period." However, the coach noted, "We've still got some work to do."

The Redmen will travel to Concordia Wednesday night for a game against the Stingers. As this is a crucial game in that McGill and Concordia are fighting for second place in the QUAA, many anticipate a bloodbath.

The players don't all view the game that way. "I think there's too much at stake for it to get too wild," remarked Bradley, looking forward to the upcoming game against the Stingers. Smith agreed, "I'd say it's going to be a really close game. It should be rough, but I don't anticipate any real problems."

McGill 73, UQTR 62:

Redmen top Pat's

by Robert Beaudin

Memo to Butch Staples, head coach of the McGill Redmen basketball team:

Butch: you're not supposed to struggle against the also-rans of the Quebec university league.

The team in question is, of course, the lowly Trois Rivieres Patriotes, whom the Redmen defeated 73-62 on Saturday afternoon. The Patriotes are suffering through a winless season of QUAA play, and had been soundly dumped on two previous occasions by this year's McGill team.

But struggle Staples' marauders did. Well, in the first half anyway.

"Trois Rivieres played an extremely strong first half against us," said Staples. "They shot well from the field, especially Robert Durocher, who was 7-9 in shooting."

Durocher was one of the prime reasons why the Patriotes trailed by a mere two points at intermission.

With the Redmen coming out of the locker room with a slim 30-28 advantage, their prime task was to play tighter defence, particularly against Durocher.

With hardly a peep heard from Durocher in the second twenty minutes because of McGill's swarming defence, the Patriotes had little to look forward to except, perhaps, a night on the town in beautiful Trois Rivieres.

With a familiar patterned and controlled type of game, McGill slowly but surely built up its lead. With a little over six minutes left in regulation time and the Redmen up by 15, both coaches began inserting substitutes. And you know what that means, basketball fans. Game over.

McGill's Robert Vallerand, the "Disco Guard", had his most productive game of the season and finished with 20 points. What made it even sweeter for Vallerand is that it came against his former teammates. Dave Drazin, who has consistently hit for double figures this season, did not disappoint. Give Dave 15 for a solid game's work.

For the Patriotes, it was the same tired old story, play well early and then fade in the stretch. A lack of overall depth forces Trois Rivieres coach Paul Thibodeau to use his five starters almost exclusively and without adequate rest. It has to wear them down considerably, especially over a long and gruelling campaign.

Berthie Desrochers led T.R. with a total of 17 points. Durocher, who scored all of his points in the first twenty minutes, added 14.

Martlets running in Three Rivers

by Richard C. Jablonski

The McGill Martlets women's basketball team solidified its hold on third place in the QUAA with a 57-52 victory over Trois Rivieres on Saturday afternoon. The win improves the Martlets' record to 3-4 in league play this season.

McGill coach Steve Forman was neither ecstatic nor disappointed with his team's showing, the reason being the inconsistency with which the Martlets performed on Saturday.

"We played for twenty minutes," said Forman. "We were down 35-28 at halftime, but outscored them 29-17 in the second half."

While the "on again off again" style of the Martlets doubtless bothers everyone involved with the team, Forman saw positive aspects in the Trois Rivieres game as well.

"We had 23 turnovers," commented Forman, "but a lot were due to our fast break offence and the kids trying stuff we haven't perfected yet."

Another positive note was the emergence of an "inside" offence, something which McGill has lacked for most of the campaign. Forward Pam Edwards, playing perhaps her best game as a Martlet, scored 11 points, pulled down 14 rebounds, and blocked two shots.

"Pam was just outstanding," said Forman of Edwards. "She was always there."

Heather Lord was also a dominant figure, as she grabbed nine offensive rebounds. With Edwards and Lord leading the way, McGill set a team record for most rebounds in a game, 42.

The Martlets' scoring was pleasantly balanced. Monica Kerwin, Lori Sprague and Karen Adams added 12, 11, and 10 points respectively to Edwards' 11. More importantly, the backcourt and the frontcourt contributed equally to the success of the team.
